

Creative Writing-Salem Elementary Adventure

By: Ashley Taylor and Sarah Harvey

Recently as an assignment, the elective class of creative writing wrote children's books. They worked hard for three weeks writing and editing their stories. The stories were based on themes that a character had to go through to teach about everyday lessons. They went on their field trip when everyone had finished their stories. As a class they walked to Salem Elementary, the home of the Superstars. The stories were then read to the kindergarteners. The kindergarteners loved the stories, and everybody had a lot of fun. Mr. Dayton's creative writing class really felt that they were making a difference in the kids' lives. They loved being able to teach something important to the children through their writing talents. They also loved being able to share their hard work with someone who appreciates it. Overall, everyone who participated in the activity really enjoyed it as classmates, and as friends.
