

Martin Luther King Jr. Day

By Carly Adamson and Josey Headman

Martin Luther King Jr. Day was on Monday, January 20, 2013. The nation's schools and businesses paused that day to remember the civil rights leader who fought so hard for civil rights and justice. We took a day off to remember his birthday and everything he did for the United States. Martin Luther King Jr. fought his whole life for his dream- equality for for all- and he even died for the cause. Martin Luther King Jr. was an amazing person who we all will continue to remember on the third Monday in January every year.
