

Spartan Reflection Night was a great experience for students and parents. This is a new program that was well attended by the Salem Jr. High community. The purpose of Reflection Night was to inform parents how their students are doing in school. From the students' perspective, it was a great experience.

During the first part of Reflection Night students introduced their parents to their seventh period teacher. Students also picked up a folder that contained their Spartan target reports and their grades. This way parents were able to see how well their student was doing. After this, each student discussed his work and then set a goal for the next term. By setting a goal, students have something to work towards, and their parents know how to help. This way the students can do better in their individual classes. In fact, Ethan Mayfield said, "Spartan Reflection Night will help me achieve my goals."

In conclusion, Spartan Reflection Night was a major success. It provided an opportunity for parent, students, and teachers to get together in an informal setting. It was a great way to check student progress. Jackson Badger said, "I think that the school should definitely do it again." Students and parents loved it. Spartan Reflection Night is a great idea, that's good for everyone.
